ABSTRACT

In 1993, Texas' 24 quality work force planning committees used a state-developed targeted occupations planning methodology to identify key industries and targeted occupations with the greatest potential for job openings in their respective regions. Between 11 and 20 key industries (13.5 on average) were identified for each region. The following 10 key industries were identified by the majority of committees: health services; business services; construction-special trade contractors; motor freight transport and warehousing; social services; engineering, accounting, research, and management; automotive repair, services, and parking; eating and drinking places; educational services; and wholesale trade-nondurable goods. The number of targeted occupations per region averaged 33, and 14 targeted occupations were identified by a majority of committees. (This document contains the lists of occupations identified by each region plus a list of priority occupations projected to have at least 500 average annual openings to the year 2000. On each list, key regional industries and regionally targeted occupations are listed by Standard Industrial Code number and Occupational Employment Service code name. A brief description of the planning methodology and brief summary of trends are included.) (MN)

1993 Key Industries and Targeted Occupations for Texas' 24 Quality Work Force Planning Regions

In 1993, Texas' 24 Quality Work Force Planning Committees again identified key industries and targeted occupations in their respective regions using the targeted occupations planning methodology developed by the State Occupational Information Coordinating Committee (SOICC). These lists are current as of February 1993 and updated the 1992 lists found in Appendix C of Texas Quality Work Planning For The 21st Century (December 1992).

Quality Work Force Planning Committees used a systematic, automated, data-driven planning method to identify these key industries and targeted occupations. The SOCRATES labor market analysis software developed by the SOICC is the underpinning of this planning method. The regional wisdom provided by each Committee is a critical part of the process of data interpretation and validation.

Planning Method

Industrial Evaluation Model

To identify key industries, Committees use the Industrial Evaluation Model from SOCRATES. The model rank orders the industries in a region according to a set of nine weighted economic indicators that identify industries with the greatest potential for job openings. The model prioritizes the industries on the basis of historical measures as well as national and statewide employment projections. Committees exercise judgment by adjusting the weight factors assigned to nine economic indicators.

- Current level of employment
- Change in employment level
- Employment projections
- Current number of businesses
- Change in number of businesses
- Current industry job openings
- Aggregate hourly index
- Number of potential new hires
- National employment projections

Regional Wisdom

After the initial ranking, Committees may add or delete specific industries based upon information received from other reliable sources of data. For example, a Committee's economic development task force may have identified a major new industry that plans to locate in the region and employ large numbers of local residents.

Staffing Patterns

Quality Work Force Planning Committees next use the Matrix Statistical System from SOCRATES to examine the occupational staffing patterns of each key industry, including percent distributions of each occupation. Committees then begin to "target" occupations within these key industries by using the Occupational Evaluation Model-Career Information Delivery System from SOCRATES to select quality occupations that meet selected criteria.

Targeted Occupations

Committees choose or "target" occupations by examining each occupation's number of projected annual average job openings, specific vocational preparation training time, growth-to-replacement ratio, wage rate, or other appropriate labor market variables. The result is a list of quality, targeted occupations within a region's key industries that have the greatest job opening potential.

Emerging Occupations

Committees may use additional, reliable sources of data to identify new and emerging occupations that may not yet be identified in occupational staffing patterns. For example, each Committee has closely examined information provided by the Texas Innovation Network System, which uses industry experts to identify the occupational spin-offs from new technologies.

State Priority Occupations

Committees also use the state list of priority occupations adopted by the State Board of Education as an additional data source. With certain exceptions, occupations on the 1993 list have at least 500 projected average annual openings to the year 2000, positive occupational growth-to-replacement ratios, training times within a period of over three months through four years, and average prevailing wage rates of at least $6.44 per hour.

Trends

The 24 lists of key industries and targeted occupations which follow, as well as the state list of priority occupations, reveal the following trends.

- The average for the number of key industries in a region is 13.5; the range is 11-20.
- Ten key industries were identified by the majority of Committees.
  - Health Services (24 Committees)
  - Business Services (23 Committees)
  - Construction—Special Trade Contractors (23 Committees)
  - Motor Freight Transport and Warehousing (23 Committees)
  - Social Services (20 Committees)

- Engineering, Accounting, Research, Management (19 Committees)
- Automotive Repair, Services, and Parking (14 Committees)
- Eating and Drinking Places (13 Committees)
- Educational Services (12 Committees)
- Wholesale Trade—Nondurable Goods (12 Committees)

■ The average for the number of targeted occupations per region is 33; the range is from 16 (Concho Valley) to 53 (Alamo). On average, 56 percent of a region's targeted occupations also are state priority occupations.

■ Fourteen targeted occupations were identified by the majority of Committees. Eleven of these 14 targeted occupations are also state priority occupations. Only Medical Lab Technologists, Heating/A.C. Mechanics, and Nursing Aides/Orderlies are not state priority occupations.

- Registered Nurses (24 Committees)
- Licensed Practical Nurses (24 Committees)
- Secretaries, Not Elsewhere Classified (NEC) (19 Committees)
- Diesel Mechanics (18 Committees)
- Electrical/Engineering Techs (18 Committees)
- Auto Mechanics (17 Committees)
- Maintenance Repairers, General (17 Committees)
- Medical Lab Technologists (17 Committees)
- Correction Officers (14 Committees)
- Heating/Air Conditioning Mechanics (13 Committees)
- Nursing Aides/Orderlies (13 Committees)
- Truck Drivers/Heavy (13 Committees)
- Systems Analyst, Electronic Data Processing (12 Committees)
- Plumbers/Pipefitters (12 Committees)
